REVENUE OF WHALES.-The Clyde Line passenger steamship Seminole arrived at New York on Saturday from Jacksonville, and reports that on her last trip to that port she was attacked by a school of six whales and sustained more or less injury to her bull and machinery. The Seminole sailed on August 1, and had passed Sandy Hook but a short time before. She was still in sight of land when a whale appeared under her bow. Into it the eminole crashed with great force, and, Purser Morton says, broke its back. This so angered the others in the This so angered the others in the school that they all, six in number, rusted at the ship together. The shock was so great that the big iron steamer careened, and many of the passengers were thrown from their passengers were thrown from their teet. The attack was repeated four W to convene S4 to S5 a day made, sells at sight; size a MAN to sell staple goods to dealers, less than S75 a month.
